In n few moments every nook and corner was searched and the papers, money, everything that could possibly hear inpor the case made into a package, along with the clothes. In one of the bureau drawers M. Laerelx found a small silver handled revolver of six barrels, five of which were leaded and one cupty, and it was of a size which would carry just such a ball as the dector had extracted from the dead man's breast. The three men took their departure, carrying with them the clothes, papers and revolver.

"We shall have to return to picht toward."

"Wo shail have to return to-night toward 10 or 11 o'clock for an experiment which I wish to make. Will you please wait our country!" said Lacroix, as they were about to go.

Houriette bowed without speaking. She had reached the limit of her forces and could o longer resist.
At about 11 Lacrolx returned, accompanie.

At about II Lorolx relurned, accompanied by Tristot and Pivolot, and it was Henricite herself who opened the door for him. She had tried to imagine what could be their object, but varily. And after all, what did it matter! It would not be one torture more. Neither of the detectives entered the house with M. Lacrolx. They remained in the garden, while he mounted to the parlor, where he said:

"I must ask your permission, madane, to go to your room for a few minutes only," "What do you wish to do!" "You shall see. It is an experiment." He went into the room. Suzanno was not in fied. She had begged so hard of her nother not to make her go to bed until they should have gone.
"Oh, mother, mother?" also had begged
